The association between a functional polymorphism in the 3-beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase gene and body mass index in young males. The 3-beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase type II gene (3betaHSD2) is a candidate gene that may affect body mass index (BMI) by altering cortisol clearance. We examined the relationship between the common deletion allele of 3betaHSD2 and BMI in two independent adolescent male cohorts (n=822 and n=511). The subjects included healthy, non-athletic, Caucasian males between the ages of 13 and 15 years. BMI was calculated using pubertal growth, and a subset of subjects reported regular physical activity for at least the past 6 months. In both cohorts, the distribution of BMI in the three genotype groups (CC, CT, and TT) did not differ significantly. This indicates that the polymorphism of the 3betaHSD2 gene is not associated with BMI in this sample. We conclude that the deletion polymorphism of the 3betaHSD2 gene does not have a major impact on BMI, and that the association of the three genotypes with obesity in other populations may be due to the complex interplay of numerous genes. Cognitive and
